

Early in 2024 I developed an eye problem, diagnosed as torsion vision, where each eye has a different horizon, causing double-vision. After about three months my brain worked out the differences and was able to superimpose the images. Brains are amazing! However, during the three months I found photography difficult, so I came up with a project: Morning. The small collection of photos in the project attempt to document the images of an early morning visit to the toilet.
